

Father and Son Adventures with Asperger Trains Tractors and High Explosives

A Heartwarming and Humorous Memoir

In Father and Son Adventures with Asperger Trains Tractors and High Explosives, author David Finch shares the heartwarming and often humorous story of raising his son, who has Asperger's. From their adventures with trains and tractors to their misadventures with high explosives, Finch paints a vivid portrait of the challenges and joys of parenting a child with special needs.

Finch's son, Alex, is a bright and inquisitive boy who loves trains, tractors, and anything that goes boom. But he also has Asperger's, a neurodevelopmental disorder that affects social interaction and communication. This can make it difficult for Alex to understand social cues and to express his emotions. But Finch and his wife are determined to help Alex reach his full potential. They find that their adventures together are a great way to teach Alex about the world and to help him develop his social skills.
