Animation is a powerful medium that can bring stories to life and create unforgettable characters. But what makes a character believable and dynamic? It's all about figure and force.

Figure is the shape and structure of a character. It's what gives them their unique look and personality. Force is the movement and energy that brings a character to life. It's what makes them seem real and believable.

In Figure and Force in Animation Aesthetics, we'll take you on a journey through the world of animation aesthetics. We'll explore the principles of figure drawing, the laws of motion, and the psychology of emotion. We'll also show you how to use these principles to create believable and dynamic characters of your own.

Figure

The human figure is a complex and beautiful thing. It's made up of dozens of bones, muscles, and joints that all work together to create movement. When you're drawing a figure, it's important to understand the underlying anatomy so that you can create poses that are both believable and dynamic.

In Figure and Force in Animation Aesthetics, we'll teach you the basics of figure drawing, including:

- The proportions of the human body
- The major muscle groups
- The range of motion for each joint

We'll also show you how to use these principles to create different types of characters, from realistic humans to stylized animals.

Force

Force is the energy that brings a character to life. It's what makes them move, talk, and interact with the world around them. When you're animating a character, it's important to understand the laws of motion and the psychology of emotion so that you can create movements that are both believable and engaging.

In Figure and Force in Animation Aesthetics, we'll teach you the basics of animation, including:

- The twelve principles of animation

- The laws of motion
- The psychology of emotion

We'll also show you how to use these principles to create different types of movement, from fluid walks to explosive jumps.
