The book begins with the author's childhood, when she first fell in love with dogs. She recalls the joy of playing with her family's golden retriever, Max, and the comfort he provided during her difficult times. As she grew older, the author continued to find solace and companionship in dogs. She adopted several dogs over the years, each one teaching her valuable lessons about life and love.

In My Life in Dog Years, the author shares her stories of joy, laughter, and heartache with her dogs. She writes about the unconditional love that dogs give, the way they can make us laugh even when we're feeling down, and the profound grief we experience when we lose them.

Through her stories, the author explores the many ways that dogs can enrich our lives. She shows how dogs can help us to be more present, to appreciate the simple things in life, and to find joy in the midst of sadness.
