A recent study by the National Center for Education Statistics found that 1 in 5 boys in the United States are not proficient in reading and math. This is a significant problem, as boys who are not proficient in these subjects are more likely to drop out of school, have trouble finding a job, and end up in poverty.

So what can parents do to help their sons succeed in school? Here are a few tips:

- Be involved in your son's education. Talk to your son about his school day, help him with his homework, and attend school events.
- Encourage your son to read. Reading is essential for success in school and in life. Make sure your son has access to books and magazines that he enjoys reading.
- Help your son develop good study habits. Create a quiet place for your son to study, and help him set up a regular study schedule.
- Talk to your son's teacher. If you are concerned about your son's progress in school, talk to his teacher. The teacher can provide you with information about your son's strengths and weaknesses, and can recommend ways to help him improve.
- Be patient and supportive. Learning takes time and effort. Be patient with your son and support him as he works to improve his grades.

Helping your son succeed in school is one of the most important things you can do as a parent. By following these tips, you can help your son reach his full potential and achieve his goals.
