How to support an Autistic child in the classroom

Classrooms are very difficult places for Autistic children. They are bright, noisy, uncomfortable and full of expectations.

Child may

- Be overwhelmed, upset, wary, anxious, and feel that the classroom is too bright, noisy, chaotic, and full of expectations. They may be uncomfortable, shy or withdrawn.
- Be aggressive, but only when things frighten you.
- Be very sensitive when you speak to him, avoid eye contact when you speak to him.
- Be very sensitive to others who do not avoid making things that they might not be able to handle every time.

Things you can say

- "I can see you're feeling a bit uncomfortable."
- "It's OK. I understand. I can help you out."
- "Don't worry about any class."
- "It's all right. I'll help you."
- "You're doing really well."

Things you can do

- Be patient and calm.
- Be gentle and kind. Don't be harsh or forceful.
- Be calm and patient. Don't be impatient or frustrated.
