

Yesterday We Were In America: A Journey Back to Nazi Germany

In the summer of 1938, Adam Langer's grandmother, Hilde, and her family fled Nazi Germany for America. They left behind everything they knew, including their home, their belongings, and their friends. Hilde was just 14 years old at the time, and she never forgot the horrors she witnessed during those dark days.

Years later, Adam began to piece together his grandmother's story. He traveled to Germany to visit the places where she had lived and to interview the people who had known her. He also spent countless hours poring over family documents and photographs. The result is Yesterday We Were In America, a powerful and moving account of one family's experience during the Holocaust.
